ABSTRACT

Intended for use by Title I teachers, this handbook is designed to aid in the selection and use of commercially prepared reading games and game-like teaching materials that teach or reinforce (1) basic sight vocabulary, (2) spelling, (3) word meaning, (4) comprehension, (5) reading readiness, (6) perception, (7) study, (8) listening, (9) fluency, and (10) decoding skills. The handbook provides the name and address of the publisher of each game, its price, its instructional and interest levels, and a description of its use. In addition, the handbook provides a list of names and addresses of publishers of instructional games and an index of the games arranged according to the skills they teach or reinforce. (FL)

FORWARD

Commercial games, from the most simple alphabet blocks to the more elaborate board-type devices, have been a great boon to the teaching of reading. Many students have learned basic sight vocabulary words, the meaning of certain affixes, how to follow directions, or some other important reading skill through playing a game. Some students have become interested in learning to read by being a group member playing a commercial game.

Many teachers have found that the use of games and game-like teaching materials can be a highly motivating factor in their teaching of reading. Games furnish effective, repeated practice on certain reading skills. Most students accept this reading practice for the challenge or fun of the game. These devices provide variety and an interesting means of drill for students who need repetition for automatic response. And, games can be played independently by one or more students while the teacher is working with others.

Games add variety to the reading program and offer an additional way to interest students in learning to read. Because games have "built-in" incentives for successful achievement, they often motivate students to maximum effort.

Like any other teaching material, a game should be carefully evaluated by the reading teacher. The following criteria should be considered before selecting a game.

1. What is the purpose of the game? Does it have possible value for use with the particular group of students with whom I work?
2. Does the game teach or reinforce a specific reading skill?
3. Is the game simple enough for my students to play?
4. Is the game one that will interest my particular group of students?

This handbook, DART III, was developed to aid reading teachers in the selection of reading games and game-like teaching materials. Some of the materials are games that teach or reinforce a specific reading skill; others are devices that can be used for the purpose of drill or practice.

Although a great many materials are included in this handbook, no attempt has been made to list every game or game-like teaching material that is currently on the market. Like any other handbook of this type, the information included here will need to be updated as new materials are offered for purchase. Furthermore, it was not intended that this handbook reflect judgements of the materials, but rather it was designed to provide the reading teacher with information needed in selecting materials appropriate for his/her particular students.

DESCRIPTION OF THE MATERIAL

Number That Can Play any number

This game provides reinforcement and extended learning experiences in the use of abbreviations.

Children progress through a learning board activity focusing on the abbreviation for: measurement terms, calendar terms, map terms, and address terms. There is a dial, a Person Learning Board, and a Puzzle Activity-that indicates certain words are abbreviated.

The purpose of this game is to reinforce the ability to match a word with a given abbreviation and to reinforce the ability to write the abbreviation for a given word. This does not teach how to make an abbreviation. It simply is reinforcemnt.

The objectives of the Elephant Walk are to develop auditory discrimination of short vowel sounds, to associate short vowel sounds with the letters that spell those sounds, and to develop understanding of word meanings. The players identify pictures along the game path, tell what vowel sound the picture name contains, and what letter spells the vowel sound.

There are variations that may be used in playing the game. For example, the players may be asked to name the picture, say the plural form of the picture name, and use the plural form in a sentence. More able students might be asked to spell the plural forms of the words.

Another variation might be to have the student name the picture and use the picture name in one of the following sentences:

If I were a ____________, I would be ____________.
If I were a ____________, I would ______________.

They would use the picture name in the first blank. Their choice of word for the second blank would demonstrate that they understand the meaning of the word.

Freeze is designed for practice in recognition of affixes and for practice in decoding three-syllable words. The words used conform to the VCV and VCCV patterns for reinforcement in syllabication rules. Children should be familiar with basic decoding skills, including some experience with syllabication principles and have familiarity with common prefixes and suffixes. The first check is for 3-syllable words with prefixes and the second is for 2-syllable words with suffixes.

Number That Can Play 2-6

The game is played like bingo. The teacher says the sounds of the letters or groups of letters and the children repeat them to themselves until they find them on their card. The first to find 5 in a row wins. The sets of cards cover the basic phonics skills, and should be used in order.

Skills taught are: (1) Initial consonants, (2) Short vowels, (3) Harder consonants, (4) Blended consonants, (5) Long vowels, (6) Vowels with r, (7) Diphthongs, (8) Miscellaneous consonants, (9) Closed and open syllables, (10) Prefixes and suffixes, (11) Three syllables.

In order to use this game individually or with a group of students, have one acting as teller. A tape would have to be made of the sounds as you couldn't count on a child teacher to always sound them out correctly. It seems rather difficult for the child to follow until he has played it several times.

This is a learning center that provides reinforcement and extended experience with homonyms. The activities involve recognizing, matching, and using homonyms.

The purposes include:
(1) Reinforcement of the matching of homonym pairs.
(2) Reinforcement of the selection of the homonyms in isolation and context.
(3) Reinforcement of the correct spelling of homonyms.

This is an extremely cute way to reinforce matching pairs; if the pairs match a creature will be formed from the back side.

It is very creative as the children can make up their own homonyms creature conversations.

Immediate reinforcementis easily available without teach interference because the child can check his own answers by matching the colors in the answer squares. When the colors match he has his answer correct. It would be used best with one child as the teacher and from 1 to 4 other children as his students. It contains work sheets to be used along with the activities for teacher check-up.

DESCRIPTION OF THE MATERIAL

Number That Can Play 4-8

The objectives of this card game are: (1) to develop skill in adding the suffixes -er, -ed, and -ing to root words that end in the -vcc, -cvc, or -ce pattern; (2) to increase word-building skills using rhyming words formed by the substitution of initial consonants, clusters, and digraphs in common spelling patters; (3) to develop the recognition that the -er, -ed, and -ing endings can affect the function of words in sentences; (4) to provide practice in using context clues to determine word meaning.

The words used on the cards are nonsense words, but the same rules that apply to real words apply to these nonsense words, so the students are learning the rules rather than words.

The main emphasis of this game is usage. He learns the past and perfect tense of verbs by building them from the present tense. The only reading is the reading of the words on the cards and the sentences at the bottom of the cards. This game is not a true reading game, but a game to teach the conjugation of the verbs that don't follow the set patterns of conjugation. There are 2 decks--one of which is slightly easier than the other. It will not teach reading other than the sight reading of the simple irregular verbs.

DESCRIPTION OF THE MATERIAL

Number That Can Play 1 - small group

This box of puzzles contains pictures of objects that can be matched, words that can be matched, and words which match the pictures of the objects. The puzzle is self-corrective in that only the correct combinations will fit together. In this manner, rhyming can be taught not only by recognizing actual words and their sounds, but also by visualization.

Space flight is a game designed to reinforce or teach word blends and provide practice in vocabulary building. The players spin the spin board and move a given number of spaces away from the starting point. Once the player has landed on a space, he must repeat the word written on his space and then say another word beginning with the same blend. If the player is unable to do this, he is penalized one space backward. The one who finishes first is the winner.

This would be a good game for remedial readers in the junior high level, especially boys.

DESCRIPTION OF THE MATERIAL

Number That Can Play 2-8

This game provides drill and experience in hearing and saying the hard and soft sounds of c,f,g, and associating them with their symbols. The symbols are visually emphasized in picture names that the children pronounce.

The hard or soft sound of c or of g predominates under certain conditions with sufficient consistency to admit the following principles:

(a) when c or g is followed in a syllable by e, i, or y the sound is usually soft.

(b) when c or g is followed in a syllable by any other letter or is the final letter in a syllable, the sound is usually hard.

Using a top with four pictures on it, each representing either hard c or g, or soft c or g, the child matches those up to pictures on his card placing a marker on each picture with the matching sound. The player that covers his card first wins.

This game contains 1 set of 60 dominoes with pictures whose names contain short or long vowel sounds.

The purposes of the game are to:

1. reinforce auditory discrimination of short and long vowel sounds, and
2. reinforce sound-symbol association of the patterns for short and long vowel sounds.

This seems to be a useful aid to practice long and short vowel sounds.

Vowel Lotto trains children first to hear vowel sounds. Words are compared by their vowel sounds, using pictures (sound words rather than visual, spelled out words). It also teaches which sounds go with which combinations of vowels, to associate sound and letters:

1. Short vowels-- a e i o u
2. Long vowels with final e-- a e i o u
3. Long vowel with silent vowel after-- ai ay ee ea oa
4. Diphthongs-- oi oy ou ow ew $\overline{oo}$ $\breve{oo}$
5. Vowel with r-- ar er ir or ur
